DENVER, April 25--Glenn A. Troudt, one of the first supervisors to work on construction of The Great Western Sugar Company factory near Goodland, was promoted today to superintendent of the factory at Bayard, Neb.

Troudt, an assistant superintendent, lives in Goodland at 1108 Harrison St. He reports to Bayard on April 29.

His advancement was one of eight promotional transfers of factory supervisors announced by Lloyd T. Jensen, Senior Vice President-Operations.

Before he came to the Factory project near Goodland, Troudt was acting superintendent of the sugar factory at Windsor, Colo. He became an assistant superintendent at Windsor in 1960. Earlier, Troudt served in the foremen group at Longmont and Fort Collins, Colo., where he began his career in 1949.

Troudt served in the Army Infantry during World War II. He was born in Timnath, Colorado, and raised and schooled in Fort Collins. He and his wife, Leah, have two sons, Glenn, Jr., who lives in Longmont, and Dennis, a student at Colorado State College at Greeley.

The other promotional transfers in the management operating staff at Great Western factories included:

Jesse E. Stone, superintendent at Bayard, Neb., was appointed superintendent at Brighton, Colo. He replaces the late Floyd W. Miller, who died on March 20.
